

Washington, D.C. – U.S. Congressman Tom Rooney (R-Fla.) today announced House passage of his resolution, H. Res. 1325, to recognize May 25, 2010 as National Missing Children's Day by a bipartisan vote of 410-0.

"More than 2,000 children are reported missing in the United States every day," Rooney said. "National Missing Children's Day will serve as a reminder to take necessary precautions to prevent abductions and help law enforcement locate missing children."

Rooney is the former CEO of Home Safe, a 50-bed shelter for abused, neglected, and abandoned children in Palm Beach County.

"I urge all parents and guardians to maintain updated, high quality photos of their children. An up-to-date photograph is one of the most important tools that law enforcement officials have when trying to locate a missing child."

President Ronald Reagan proclaimed the first National Missing Children's Day on May 25, 1983 after a series of high-profile abduction cases, including the 1981 abduction of six-year-old Adam Walsh in Florida. These cases brought national attention to the problem of child abduction and the lack of coordination among federal, state, and local law enforcement agencies to help families search for missing children.

"Our country has made great strides in improving coordination and giving law enforcement officials the tools to find missing children since the first National Missing Children's Day," Rooney said. "I hope this resolution will remind people across the country not to forget the children who are still missing and not to waver in the efforts to reunite these children with their families."

For a video of Rooney's floor speech yesterday on H. Res. 1325, click HERE .

###